Acknowledgements

It would not have been possible to write this doctoral thesis without the help and support of the kind people around me, to only some of whom it is possible to give particular mention here.

Above all, I would like to thank my wife Rachael for her personal support and great patience at all times. My parents, brother and sister have given me their unequivocal support throughout, as always, for which my mere expression of thanks likewise does not suffice.

This thesis would not have been possible without the help, support and patience of my principal supervisor, Prof. Patrick Sims-Williams, not to mention his advice and unsurpassed knowledge of comparative Celtic linguistics. The good advice, support and friendship of my second supervisor, Dr. Rhisiart Hincks, has been invaluable on both an academic and a personal level, for which I am extremely grateful.

I would like to acknowledge the financial, academic and technical support of the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth and its staff, particularly in the award of a Postgraduate Research Studentship that provided the necessary financial support for this research. The library facilities (notably the Celtic collection) and computer facilities of the University, as well as the National Library of Wales, have been indispensable. I also thank the Department of Welsh for their support and assistance since the start of my previous postgraduate work in 1998, especially the head of department, Prof. Gruffydd Aled Williams.

I am most grateful to Andrew Hawke for providing me with computer files of his unpublished versions of the Cornish texts, which have been a valuable and reliable method of checking the published editions and have made referencing quotations from the texts far more efficient. It was particularly kind of him to allow me to refer to his

I would like to express the deepest appreciation to my committee chair, Professor Godfrey-Sykes Irvine, who has the attitude and the substance of a genius: he continually and convincingly conveyed a spirit of adventure in regard to research and scholarship, and an excitement in regard to teaching. Without his guidance and persistent help this dissertation

I would like to thank my committee members, Professor M. Chaphaga Tridactyla and Professor Marmaduke Orange, whose work demonstrated to me that concern for global affairs supported by an "engagement" in comparative literature and modern technology should always transcend academia and provide a quest for our times.

In addition, a thank you to Professor V. Milicic of Western University, who introduced me to Linguistics, and whose enthusiasm for the "underlying structures" had lasting effect. I thank the University of Chicago Press for permission to include copyrighted photographs as part of my thesis/dissertation. I also thank Springer Verlag for permission to include Chapter Five of my dissertation, which was originally published in Linguistics Journal. Financial support was provided by the University of California, Irvine, NSF Grant DEB-8227052 and a MacArthur predoctoral fellowship in International Peace and Security granted by the Social Science Research Council.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

We express our deep gratitude to the Almighty Allah who created and nurture of in this transitory world. We also express my gratitude to Him for giving me an opportunity to do this assignment successfully, under our BBA program.

We are grateful to our faculty honorable teacher Mr. Md. Maniruzzaman, Department of Marketing, Bangladesh University of Business & Technology. His sincere guidance, untiring cooperation, valuable advice and endless inspiration enabled us to overcome the entire problem during the course of our study and preparation of this report.

We are very thankful to Mr. Mashiur Rahman, the Manager of Mohakhali Branch of Dutch-Bangla Bank Ltd. who has given me all the necessary information and suggestion. I also want to express my gratitude to Mr. Mafijul Islam, my thesis advisor, without his supervision, help and valuable suggestion it would not be impossible for me to complete my thesis.

We are also thankful to all other departmental heads, officials, and also all office staffs of Dutch-Bangla Bank, of Mohakhali branch Dhaka. All of the supportive bodies closer to this working environment and help to gain experience about Dutch-Bangla Bank operations, express the deepest sense of regards and special gratitude to them.

Finally, I would like to express my gratitude to all the people who helps me by providing their valuable assistance and time during this internship program.

A Contrastive Study of Master Thesis Acknowledgements by Taiwanese and North American Students

Stephanie W. Cheng Graduate Institute of TESOL, National Chiao Tung University, Hsinchu, Chinese Taipei Email: scheng@mail.nctu.edu.tw

Received January 2nd, 2012; revised February 17th, 2012; accepted February 26th, 2012

Thesis acknowledgements are a written part genre in which graduate students express their gratitude towards a number of addressees upon completion of theses. Previous studies on thesis acknowledgements have focused on the expressions of gratitude or their generic structure. However, socio-cultural values and norms can shape the ways people express thanks and influence the rhetorical structure of a genre like thesis acknowledgements. The present study compares and contrasts the use of thanking strategies in 60 thesis acknowledgements written in English by Taiwanese and North American master students. Results show that Taiwanese students (TS) use more thanking strategies than North American students (NAS); specifically, they employ more explicit thanking strategies but less implicit thanking strategies than NAS.
They also use more complex thanking strategies but less simple thanking strategies than NAS. Interestingly, the two groups vary in the arrangement of addressees and the choice of strategies for various addressees, reflecting different cultural perceptions of expressing gratitude. For example, NAS appear to make a more flexible arrangement of advisors and family members than TS. These subtle differences between TS and NAS thesis acknowledgements reveal Taiwanese and North American students' embedded socio-pragmatic perceptions of writing this genre.

Introduction

Research in English for Academic Purposes (EAP) has received growing attention and produced studies of various academic text types in different settings. Acknowledgements appear widely in academic writing, especially in theses and dissertations. Thesis acknowledgements provide student writers a chance to express their gratitude for the intellectual guidance, personal assistance as well as encouragement and moral support they have received in completing their research. Acknowledgements in theses and dissertations, thus, signify not only a unique rhetorical act for interpersonal relationship, but also a reflection of student writers' socio-cultural values and identity in academia. However, the acknowledgement section has received much less attention than the other sections in theses and dissertations, namely, Abstract, Introductions, Literature review, Methods, Results, Discussion and Conclusion.

While acknowledgements encourage students to express their gratitude explicitly and honestly and to show their interpersonal network in the academic community, students may have problems adequately expressing gratitude in this academic discourse (Hyland, 2004). Specifically, writing thesis acknowledgements involves social and cultural pragmatism. Many questions may arise: how do graduates in different social contexts and cultures perceive and express gratitude in thesis acknowledgements? Are there socio-cultural preferences in arranging the thanked addressees in thesis acknowledgements? Are there socio-cultural variations in the use of thanking strategies and their linguistic realizations?

Previous studies on thesis acknowledgements have mainly focused on the expressions of gratitude and their generic structure (Hyland, 2004; Hyland & Tse, 2004). Very few studies have compared thesis acknowledgements by native and non-native students of English. Furthermore, existing research on acknowledgements has rarely taken a socio-cultural perspective in analyzing how thanks are expressed, who are thanked, and how and why the thanked addressees are arranged in thesis acknowledgements.

Therefore, this study attempts to compare and contrast master thesis acknowledgements by native and non-native speakers of English, specifically, North American and Taiwanese students, in terms of thanking strategies, linguistic realizations of thanking strategies, relations between thanking strategies and the thanked addressees, and arrangement preference for the thanked addressees.

Approaches to Acknowledgements in Academic Texts

Over the course of the last century, acknowledgements have become widespread and an important feature of scholarly texts (Bazerman, 1984, 1988). From the early times, acknowledgements in academic research has been of great interest to bibliometricians who use quantitative methods in seeking to trace the lines of research networks and relationships amongst academic journals (Cronin, 1991, 1995; Cronin, Mckenzie & Rubio, 1993; Cronin, Mckenzie, & Stiffler, 1992; Cronin & Overfelt, 1994). Although these researchers classify acknowledgements according to their features and functions, they have not examined the organizational patterns and linguistic realizations of acknowledgements in any particular genre.

More recently, studies have taken a genre analysis approach
