Although there is a lot of weeks of farming after you beat all 4 bosses it ends up being something you finish in about an hour once you have it on farm. ... FF14 ... I'm kinda in a slump in FFXIV end game lately — the whole Tome acquisition for gear grinding has almost zero incentive for me right now. I've been leveling alt jobs and doing stuff on alts, but when it comes to running Expert for Creation Tomes, or even getting drops from the new alliance roulette, my heart is just not in it. One thing I have been good about keeping up with is the daily Kojin Beast Tribe quests. I had a few days where I almost missed doing them, but I'd always log in before work to queue them up for later that day. Thank goodness they let you run two sets of dailies just in case you missed them the day before. Yesterday, I logged in to discover I'd hit max rank... or rather, I needed to finish the last Kojin quest to reach max rank with them. I had a good idea that we'd be getting a new mount from that, so I set out for Yanxia, the first place I needed to go in the guest. Of Foxy Ladies Just as I was making my way towards the guest spot, I heard someone shout in the zone that the Foxy Lady FATE was up. I quickly dropped everything I was doing and headed to that location! And through the nasty rainy day, there she was... Now, let me tell you, I'd resigned myself to never seeing this FATE, much less completing it. It was very popular among FATE hunters back when Stormblood first launched, and Vix was totally into tracking the time and prerequisites for popping the FATE. But I leveled slowly at Stormblood's launch, and either was too low leveled to reach the spot this FATE spawned, or whatever the reason. I never got to do it. I didn't think other people were still interested in doing this FATE. I figured everyone already had their fox ears and minion. Even as I hovered over the FATE in that picture above, watching the time tick down, I didn't see other people arriving. At first, But, then, I noticed about three people off to the side of the FATE, and I came to join them. Time kept ticking down, and slowly, the number of arrivals increased. Eventually, we decided we needed to pull at 14 mins, or risk failing due to the timer. So, I jumped into a Party Finder group (I rarely use this, so that was an adventure to me), which was made up of all DPS but one White Mage. Thankfully, most of us were Red Mages, so there was plenty of spot heals and rezzes. This is a fun FATE! It had a number of mechanics to learn, and was not an easy fight by any means. So I felt that we really did earn our rewards in the end. Here's what the turnout looked like at her defeat: A number of us got this first-time achievement, and we all rushed back to turn in our fragments for the cosmetic, pet and housing items. Seems like there were far more folks than I'd guessed who still needed to finish this, too! Beast Tribe Goodies Getting that win under my belt, I continued on with the Kojin quest. I'm not going to say I feel like this was the best Beast Tribe story I've ever played through, but it wasn't bad. I did enjoy parts of it. The guests themselves seem to be even faster to complete than the Heavensward guests, which was fine with me. This was usually a guick 10-15 min thing to do everyday. I still plan on trying to remember to do them for leveling purposes! I really appreciate that the Kojin reputation items are purchasable using the reputation currency, rather than requiring gil like tribes in the past. And rewards are guite affordable, with even the mount only costing 12. The striped ray mount I expected to get, What I didn't expect to get was a new emote! In fact, I almost overlooked it because of the mount. and because it was somewhat hidden in the rest of the stuff you can buy. Seeing its name, Ballroom Etiquette - Heathen Gestures, I was the prayer motions the Kojin make before their treasure vault. And I was right. But it has a little something more! You get this cool blue flame! Really, a screenshot doesn't do it justice. Add to that the title you get "Of the Blue" and I'm a pretty happy camper with these rewards. Though I'm a Red Mage, blue is one favorite color (aside from teal), so I'll be rocking this new title for a while! Tamamo no Mae Woodblock print by Tsukioka Yoshitoshi If you missed part 3, you can read it here! Welcome back! This week I'll be covering the myth of Tamamo-no-Mae. In Final Fantasy XIV, she makes her appearance as the land's protector. Pictured above is a take on Tamamo's chosen human form in real-life mythology, and further variants can be found in abundance. If you're unfamiliar with Tamamo-no-Gozen in Final Fantasy XIV, she is the boss of the Foxy Lady F.A.T.E., which might spawn after completion of its prerequiste FATEs. I don't usually like to talk about the in game appearances at length, because most of you reading I'd like to believe are familiar with the guest chain. However due to the nature of how she appears in XIV, the story line is easily missable, so I've decided to summarize it the best I can for those of you reading. The guestline begins with the completion of two FATEs, Kinko (Freedom Flies) and Ginko (More to Offer), where you aid two young au ri maidens. The latter seems to have no bearing on the story, only mentioning the mistress she serves. Kinko however, requires you to aid her by eliminating the Koshu Onmyoji are to be dealt with, trying to capture Mikuzume to capture the power within her. However, over the course of this FATE, Mikuzume, although fighting with them to leave while she is still herself. The Onmyoji do not heed her warning though, and are guick to fall when she transforms into Tamamono-Gozen, furious at the Onmyoji for defiling Yanxia with their magic. From Left to Right: Ginko, Kinko, and Mikuzume The final stage of this questline is the FATE Foxy Lady, where you fight Tamamo-no-Gozen herself, to calm the auspice after it escapes capture from another Onmyoji. When this FATE spawns, an NPC also appears at a broken shrine in Yanxia, who tells you of Tamamo-no-Gozen's background. "It is rare we receive visitors here anymore, let alone ones who have traveled so far. Have you come to pay your respects to Tamamo-no-Gozen? This shrine was build long, long ago by a powerful landowner who saved a fox from a wolf trap. Since then, the spirit of that fox has protected this land from evil. Yet even she could not forestall the empire's coming, and now... And now, the people of Yanxia are forbidden to even look upon this place without fear of imprisonment, or even death. I am too old to care what the Garleans might do to me. and so I alone come here to pray." -Namai Elder At the conclusion of this quest line, Tamamo-no-Gozen drops Sassho-seki Fragments you can trade in for an item, and Ginko and Kino arrive on scene to attend to Lady Mikuzume. Tamamo-no-Gozen, As she appears in the FATE, Outfoxed If you remember though, I did say I would be talking about Tamamo-no-Mae. So where does the "-Gozen" part come in? ... Unfortunately, it's hard to say. My best guess is that they were aiming for a mix between Tamamo-no-Mae and Suzuka Gozen which is... really funny if you're into Fate/, but that's another story. I have already touched over the legend Suzuka Gozen is most involved in in my 2nd post in the series though, so please take a look if you need a refresher! So then, who is Tamamo-no-Mae? A cunning kyuubi, or nine-tailed fox, responsible for the fall of Princes and Kings alike in both China and India, taking on multiple aliases and the forms of different beautiul woman to achieve her goals. At some point though, she arrived in Japan, and her tale truly begins from there. Sometime after her arrival in Japan, Tamamo took the form of a human baby to hide as, and was adopted by a couple who named her Mikuzume. As she "grew" as Mikuzume, she caught the eye of those around her for her beauty and intelligence, eventually becoming employed in Emperor Toba's court after catching his favor. Emperor Toba eventually took such a liking to her that he designated her as his consort, and bestowed the name Tamamo-no-Mae onto her. However, shortly after this, Emperor Toba fell deathly ill. His court fell into an uproar at his illness, with priests coming in and out to pray for his recovery, and they called upon a diviner, or fortune teller, Abe-no-Yasunari for his aid. Abe-no-Yasunari giving his divination to the Emperor and his court His divination revealed Tamamo as the source of the Emperor's illness, so that, depending on legend, she could either claim the throne for herself, or throw the country into chaos. Abe-no-Yasunari's divination also revealed to him Tamamo's true form as a beautiful golden nine-tailed fox, but Emperor Toba stubbornly refused to believe it. Thus, to prove her true form and to save the Emperor, Abe-no-Yasunari decided to perform a ceremony to the gods, with a part for Tamamo-no-Mae. If she performed the part successfully, she would be proven innocent, however – if she failed to complete it, she would be revealed as the malicious spirit she was. Tamamo attempted to refuse to take part, but was eventually persuaded into it by the Emperor's attendants, saying it would raise her status further. When the ceremony came, Tamamo, dressed in more beautiful attire than usual, disappeared midway through reading her part in the ceremony. The court flew into an uproar once more upon this confirmation, and soon the land's best warriors Kazusa-no-suke and Miura-no-suke were given an army and a mission to slay Tamamo-no-Mae. Tama girl begged him to save her, as she would lose his life to him tomorrow if he did not. Miuranosuke refused, and the next day lead his army out proclaiming that was the day that they would slay her. His intuition proved correct, and Tamamo-no-Mae lay slain by either his arrow or sword. The Sessho-seki (殺生石), The killing stone in Nasu, Tochigi, Japan. After that point however, the are further variations on what happened to both her body and spirit. In one iteration, Tamamo's corpse was taken back to the Emperor's palace, where it soon gave birth to a variety of treasures. But in others, her corpse transforms into the Sessho-seki, or her vengeful spirit embedded itself into the rock where she was slain. Anyone or anything who dared to approach the stone, would perish because of the posionous gas it released. According to the Tamamo no Soushi, written in 1653, a Buddhist Monk purified the stone and exorcised the now repentant for her deeds Tamamo, allowing her to rest in piece. Tamamo-no-Mae as depicted in the Fate/Series Unlike in Final Fantasy XIV, where Tamamo is regarded as a protector of the land, Tamamo-no-Mae in folklore was a cunning woman who brought disaster of her own accord. The game takes subtle things such as the name of Mikuzume and the Sessho-seki to allude to their version's origins however, and is just one of many modern takes on the figure. My next post will be focusing on the bosses of the dungeon, Swallow's Compass – so please look forward to it! ffxiv foxy lady fate timer
