Even though the United States were not short of unoccupied land, expansionists advanced the argument that it was necessary to continue the growth of reality so it survives. They saw the abundance of land as guarantor of a major role and launched warnings against the concentration of endemic and political powers. For them, territorial expansion, far from weakening the Republic, would, on the other hand, be a means of fortalecê it, providing unlimited uneconÃámicas opportunities for future geographies. The expansionists were resented in their condemnation by urbanization and the explosion of démográfica due to the high rate of Christmas© and the influx of immigrants from Europe. The American population increased by more than 5 million in 1800 to more than 23 million in 1850. Therefore, it was necessary to tend new territories to respond to this rapid growth. It is estimated that about 4 million Americans migrated to western territories between 1820 and 1850. This movement was encouraged by the epidemic depressants of 1818 and 1839, which led many people to look hard enough to live on the border. Southerners were among the most fervent champions of expansionism. The new slave states would strengthen the political power of the South in Washington and, equally importantly, provide a healthy solution to their growing slave population. The fate manifest was thus one of the causes of land attachment in Mexico, particularly in Texas, and contributed to the expansion of slavery in the South. Justification for the territorial expansion Inference and Ancecation of neighboring territories along the XIX season, Americans lived with the idea that the continent offered unlimited expansion possibilities, since the border was pushed back. The German geologist Friedrich Ratzel visited Amman © rich in the North from 1873 and can see the American "manifest destination" in action[11],[12],[13]. Although he was solid with the concept, Ratzel advocated the creation of overseas German colonies in Asia and Africa but did not favor the expansion to Slavic lands. Later, his German epigons misinterpreted his ideas as a defence of the right of the German nation to expand to neighbouring European territories; this notion was later incorporated into Nazi ideology as "Lebensraum". Harriet Wanklyn (1961) argues that the objective of Ratzel's theory was to advance science and that politics had distorted it for political purposes[15].
