However, in the case of photographic prints, an already developed colour print cannot be changed to sepia. Tonification of Tonification of the word. Now, any guess as to why a fish name would be used to mean the tone of a photographic image? In analog photography, it is a chemical process performed on metallic salt prints, such as silver prints, iron-based prints (cyanotype or van Dyke Brown), or platinum or palladium prints. Later, artificially developed tints replaced this purely organic (and underwater) pigment. In sepia tone, chemicals are used to convert the metallic silver in the print into a sulfide compound called silver sulfide (AG2), which is 50% more stable than silver, making it more resistant to environmental contaminants. Incomplete bleaching creates a multi-tone image with sepia highlights and mid-tones of gray tones and shades. Archived from the original on December 20, 2009. Examples The examples below show a digital color photograph, a black and white version and a sepia version. Retrieved on 18 March 2010. Fiber-based papers are more sensitive to selenium toning. [2] Selenium toning cannot produce impressions as stable as sepia or gold toning.
