[7][3] the greatest and most powerful of chromatic dragons, the red dragons were also the most fearsome and cruel. These dragons rejoiced in the ruin, death and destruction. 7 They breathed a cone of fire. [3] rapacious, cunning and destructive, red dragons are the favorite sons of tiamat, embodying the worst dragonkind has to offer. description[] Red dragons are physically distinguished by their huge size and wingspan. they had two big horns on their heads, which were pointing back to their wings. They smelled like smoke and sulfur. like all chromatic dragons, reds lived their lives in cycles of activity and hibernation. While these cyclical rhythms were not as extreme as green dragons, red dragons sealed within their lair for the top of ten years at a time. [9] During their active periods they were known as over-hunters voracious, whose hunger guaranteed that the populations of any nearby creature did not grow beyond ecological stability. [10] personality[] a red dragon with a humanoid in his grip having is nothing, keeping is everything. The red dragons believed that they were the pinnacle of the arachonic nature and that all other species were impure. They evaluated revenge, rapture, greed and ferocity over other traits and recognized these traits proudly. were lonely creatures and cared for little news of other types of dragons. However, they searched for news of other red dragons in their area. 7 If they believed that their results and their goods were greater than these other red dragons, they remained in their caves, congratulating them. However, if they learned that the results or possessions of other red dragons were greater than they would,in a vengeful anger, decimating the surrounding area until they believed they had their rivals. The dragon became much less cautious during this period and much more probability of underestimating their enemies. [7] A red dragon would go to extreme lengths to make sure they were superior to any other red dragon in the area. They often burned only half a village or let a single adventurer escape from a battle so that the word of their power spread throughout the region. Not only would this rage other red dragons, but it was also like a shining lighthouse to adventurers and treasure hunters. [7] Red dragons despise weakness between their kind. If you've ever discovered that another of their relatives has shown signs of fragility, becoming seriously injured or if they were becoming elegant breasts in old age, then the local red dragons descended on the den, stripping clean and usually killing the owner. They believed that if a red dragon could not protect what he had, then he didn't deserve to start. [11] The reds were also highly territorial. By entering a red area considered the domain of him had to be attacked, especially if he was another dragon who entered the area (even more if he was a red dragon). The conflict was inevitable if this was the case and it was almost always to death despite him nor would he dare to show the other weakness. Fortunately, most other species were smart enough to escape if it realized that the area belonged to a red dragon. The red dragons could obtain so territorial that in rare occasions would have adopted a protective but condescending attitude towards the creatures that considered lower than lived within their self-imposed borders. [7] Red dragons hated any authority other than one's own. They never asked the elderly for advice, even if they were jumping their lives on them, admitting that they needed something that their elders had been the same to put themselves under their authority. [Necessary quote] Combat [] A red dragon incinerating an adventurer pesky. Respiro weapon [] red dragons expelled an extremely devastating fire cone. [1] Adventurers who have been struggling too tightly or lacked that fire protection would probably find themselves burned to a crunchy before they could even start fighting the mighty enemy. Red dragons prefer to fight with their physical bite and claws, but they could obviously powerful barbecues or numerous enemies before blood with Glee. Dragons would also prefer not to use breath on particularly weak enemies so as not to destroy the precious treasure they carry. This section is a stub. You can help us expand it. Company [] A revision of the red dragon anatomy. Lair [] red dragons made their homes in low mountainous in In the peaks of the North-West and northern FaerÁ E A, surrounding the great Anauroch desert. [12] They were particularly abundant around the snowy mountains of the vertebral column of the world. [13] Some red dragons have been spotted south as the mountains of the sunset, or even Tethyr. [14] even if they generally avoided any rangers near "civilized" "civilized" Habitat[] Red dragons loved to make their lair in deep underground caves in mountainous regions. Many preferred to live in volcanoes, where intense heat kept others at bay. Almost all red dragons simply required a high perch. The higher the better than they thought their domain would understand everything they could see. The young red dragons, especially the wyrmlings were easy prey for predators and hunters because of their brilliant and bright scarf scales, so they tended to remain underground in the darkness until they heard that they could defend themselves correctly. [15] Religion [] Many red dragons were known to worship the deities Bane, Garyx, Loviatar and Malar.[16] Reproduction[] The mating was started by the female every century or so when she felt the desire to have children. He sought the nearest red dragon with most wealth and power. As such, males have never denied their progress. It was a prestigious sign among other males to be requested to mate. [11] After mating, the male abandoned her while she slaved her eggs. He jealously guarded the clutch, occasionally with the assistance of a female infertile, but rarely laid his life for his followers. [11] An average red dragon clutch had four eggs and had a 270-day incubation time. [15] A red dragon notes the last survivor of a burning city. Once the young adult phase of development reached, or sometimes before, the natural instincts of the mother overwhelmed the maternal ones and forced all her young people from her territory. [11] Reports[] Red dragons hated silver dragons with a passion as their familiarity with the cold element and other natural powers often made red dragons appear weak in battle with them. They also commonly entered into conflict with copper dragons for the rights of the territory, although copper dragons rarely won against the most powerful red dragons in open conflict. 7 But above all, the red dragons hated the golden dragons. Red dragons could proclaim strong that they would fight and defeat any golden dragon that came across, but often found an excuse not to fight when that time eventually came. Gold dragons were so similar to red dragons but their natural moral differences were extreme. [7] A small contingent of red dragons served high rank githyanki as mounts and companions, following a treaty established with Tiamat during the war between circumstance and flayers of the mind. The dragons served the githyanki during their young age, being rejected as soon as they reached adulthood and maintaining wealth accumulated over their years of service. 17 The dragons have suffered from their time of servitude, but they were eager to participateincursions thanks to the promise of treasure and to grow in power. The dragons remained faithful to their knights until they were treated with respect and were given ample opportunities for plundering. [17] Use[] It was said that red dragon meat had an extremely spicy flavor. To be properly prepared, it had to be exposed to open airAt least two days and aged for some time. Anyone who ate the red dragon meat that was not treated in this way was susceptible to horrible cramps and extreme pain. [18] Furthermore, the bones and stairs of all dragons can be used to create powerful magic equipment with the correct know-how (for example, the staircase of the dragon). The equipment is usually imbued with the elemental powers of the dragon from which it came from, therefore in the case of red dragons, such equipment will protect or dedicate damage to fire.
