The cougar is extremely agile and has great power jump and can jump from the ground to a height of 18 feet in a tree. It is a good swimmer, but prefers not to enter the water. The view is the most acute sense with a good sense of hearing, but it is thought to have a poorly developed sense of smell. Size and appearance: The cougar is the largest cat in the genre à ¢ Felisa, and is comparable in size as the leopard. They vary in length from 59 to 108 inches, with a tail length of 21 to 36 inches, and height 23 to 28 inches at the shoulder. The weight can vary greatly, between 75 and 250 pounds. They have a long body with a small head, short snout, and a long neck and tail. They are robust, and the hind legs are larger than the front. The ears are small, short and rounded. Habitat: The cougar thrives in mountainous, coniferous forests, lowland tropical forests, swamps, meadows, dry brush country, or any other area with adequate cover and prey. Distribution: Western North America from British Columbia and Alberta south south through western Wyoming to California and western Texas. Also south of Texas, Louisiana, South Alabama, Tennessee, and Florida peninsula. Reproduction and Offspring: there is no fixed breeding season, but in North America, the majority of births occur between late winter and early spring. 1 to 6 (usually 2-3) cougar kittens after a gestation period of 90-96 days. Mothers give birth to their young in burrows that are lined with moss or vegetation, usually in rock shelters, crevices, piles of stones, woods, caves, or some other protected location. The kittens weigh about 7-16 ounces at birth, and have spotted coats until they are about 6 months old. They will continue to nurse for 3 or more months, but will begin to take meat to 6 weeks. The kittens will start to play until they have established a permanent village. The reproduction can stay up to 12 years of age for females and 20 years, compared to 8 to 10 in the cougar wild. At Big Cat Rescue lived in a month shy of 30 years. Social system and communication: Cougars are solitary cats and will avoid other people except during mating. They communicate by using visual and olfactory, and males regularly make scratches in the ground or snow. Their vocalizations include growls, hisses, and bird-like whistles. They purr The domestic cats, and during the inspiration, the females emanate strong, shouts to raise the hair. Listen to our fuss, hiss, growls, calls, and growl sounds here for hunting and diet: Cougars feed mainly on large mammals, preferring deer, but but Eat even coyotes, porcupini, beaver, mice masters, hares, raccoons, birds and even grasshoppers. They kill stalking up to 30 feet from their prey before looking for his hiding place. Skip on her victim back and bites in her neck and holds with her sharp claws. Main threats: according to the 2001 statistics provided for by making sales of hunting permits, almost 2100 cougares are still killed every year. This figure does not include all the cougars killed by hunters who do not buy licenses report their killings. Less than 3% of our population are hunters but kill over 100 million animals every year for sport. Status: CITES: Appendix I, USDI: Endanged 2003 Felid Tag Recommendation: Puma (Puma Concolor). A largely held species from the collections, when possible, in favor of species of similar Felids, but rare or PMP. We only recommend acquisition of pumas needed for education or zoogeographic exhibition. With the exception of the Florida panther, no reproduction is recommended. The population of the StuBook keeper strives to reduce this number to 120 or less. In cases of exhibition requirement, new animals should be acquired by other AZA institutions or, alternatively, of the CUBURs of the sanctuary or rescue programs. How rare cougers are?
