Quintessential quintuplets season 2 ending

2021 © Disclaimer: All this happened in one night and I procrastinated for a few days to finish it. I need say no more. Compared to past episodes from the Go-touban no Hanayome fl anime that had few alterations from its source material, Episode 4 contained a vast amount omissions, blowing away its predecessors out of Writing this in the dead peak of night and not sleeping for a speck of time, I had my work cut out. With that said, I'm going to forego making an introduction because it sucks and takes too long to draft so let's instead get on with this post without pause. Let's goooooOOooooOOooooOOooooOOoOo... Right off the bat, the episode delineates from the manga by starting near the end of Chapter 46. It skips Miku and Nino's reconciliation in favor of when Futarou spied on Yotsuba who was close to departing for her track and field team's practice. As he grumbled over Yotsuba's frustrating tendency of accepting every obligation presented to her, Ichika lingered in the background while making a phone call with Miku about how things unfolded with Nino. From Page 16 of Chapter 46From Page 17 of Chapter 46 However, that phone call as shown in the manga detracts in the anime. The source saw Miku pick up Ichika's call and plead for her help. The anime, however, oversaw Miku fail to pick up Ichika's calls since, according to the prospective actress, the third sister's phone was turned off. Nevertheless, Ichika ran off to meet up with Miku under the basis that the latter told her about Nino's location. When Futarou sees Yotsuba and her Yotsucrew trudge away for their practice, he and a talling Itsuki closely followed with intrigue. Futarou stressed the need to do something before Yotsuba Yotsugoes away, enabling Itsuki to ask if he had suggestions. From Page 18 of Chapter 46From Page 19 of Chapter 46From Page 1 of Chapter 46From Page 2 of Chapter 46 Once Futarou looked back at a now confused Itsuki, the story reverts back to the beginning of Chapter 46 and Miku and Nino's conversation. The beginning of the two siblings' conversation was featured with an overlay of their respective drinks along with Nino refusing outright to return to her old luxurious apartment. Due to this week's episode's introduction, the anime skipped what happened immediately after Nino's disapproval in the manga including her teasing against Miku about what happened between herself and Futarou. From Page 8 of Chapter 46 In the argument that varied on Nino returning home, a sizeable amount of dialogue was left out. It featured Nino discussing how stressed she felt from living in the family quarters because of the quint's different individual personalities. From Page 13 of Chapter 46 Just before Nino searched Google about the difference in type of leaves used to cultivate their favorite tea, a small grin formed on her face, signaling the touching reprisal of camaraderie that was non-existent as a result of the fight between herself and Itsuki. Save for the ending of Chapter 46 that revealed the nature of Futarou's "Substitution Plan" and Ichika running in desperation to meet Miku, the ending of the apartment scene raised the curtain for Yotsuba's entrapment with the track team from Chapter 47. From Page 2 of Chapter 47From Page 3 of Chapter 47From Page 4 of Chapter 47 As Itsuki (somewhat) succeeded in impersonating as Yotsuba, Futarou briefed her on how his plan will unfold before briskly posing himself as a molester to set it in motion. Also, it's quite a shame for an anime studio to not adapt the panel of Futarou giving Itsuki the thumbs up from beyond the blue and clear sky. Moving ahead, Eba, the school's runner, propped Itsuki/Yotsuba into following her before they missed the train, which was skipped from the show. Ever the unexplained physical specimen, Yotsuba caught up to a retreating Futarou by diving and catching him. Futarou then informed his ribbon student about Itsuki trying to dupe her track teammates. Yotsuba sought to return back to her teammates as soon as possible, but as she did so, Futarou admonished her for failing to learn how to prioritize with things that matter to her life. From Page 7 of Chapter 47 The outburst was raw, unfiltered, and critical enough to force Yotsuba to recalculate her old Yotsupersonality and change into a responsible person. From Page 9 of Chapter 47 In between Itsuki's 5,000,000 IQ 720 no-scope deception on Eba and Yotsuba retreating to meet her team, the captain described her teammate's general mannerisms and the abnormality behind wanting to quit so abruptly. Was it skipped? You betcha. How about the captain admitting to aim for the top of the high school track and field world without care for her academics? That was skipped tooooooo. But then, in comes Nino! Not that Nino. This Nino. That's right. During her absolute disobedience to Eba's practice, Nino chastised her for taking advantage of Yotsuba's physical talents to sit atop the competitive pecking order. Aias, that scene was skipped in the show. From Page 11 of Chapter 47 Afterwards, Eba fell back on her butt after Nino's rebuke in the anime. In the manga, she fell to her knees out of fear. From Page 12 of Chapter 47 A rearrangement of panels during Nino's hair reveal scene was done for the anime. Not one panel was altered from within, but its chronological order was changed to suit the story's narrative in the anime. From Page 13 of Chapter 47From Page 14 of Chapter 47 During Nino and Itsuki's uplifting reconciliation, Futarou butted in their conversation to defend Itsuki's actions, but he was shoed off by Miku and Ichika for their siblings' sake. Plus, as he was getting dragged away, he hinted on having "an ace up [his] sleeve" for the upcoming exam. From Page 18 of Chapter 47 In Chapter 48, save for Itsuki and Nino saying they were back home, the contents between Yotsuba pleading for her family's forgiveness and Futarou telling her to stand up was skipped. (P.S. The part of Yotsuba mentioning her collaboration with the team after the meet was said while she bowed on the floor did not happen in the manga. In fact, it was written inside a small retrospective panel while the family was eating breakfast.) From Page 1 of Chapter 48From Page 2 of Chapter 48From Page 3 of Chapter 48From Page 4 of Chapter 48From Page 5 of Chapter 48 The metaphorical video game reference from Futarou about his students' progress was cut (though Ichika faintly sawed it with her "level up" mention). And instead of giving hints on what his secret plan was, he revealed it without suspense. From Page 6 of Chapter 48 Examination time finally arrived for the main cast, and with it comes more skipped content! First off going to the chopping block is the scene of Isanari Uesugi, Futarou's father, waking his son up and dragging him to meet Itsuki. From Page 12 of Chapter 48 Second, a small stream of panels showing Nino feeling troubled of Futarou potentially facing expulsion because of her father's stipulations for the tests was upended (at least until later in the episode). From Page 13 of Chapter 48 And third, Futarou's conversation with the quint's father was cut. Entirely. The viewers didn't get to see him verbally spar with his employer for failing to attend to his daughters' recent troubles. Furthermore, Futarou's belief in failing to adequately prepare his students for the exam, which was the main grounds for his resignation as the quint's tutor, was also cut. From Page 14 of Chapter 48From Page 15 of Chapter 48From Page 16 of Chapter 48From Page 17 of Chapter 48From Page 18 of Chapter 48 He alluded to the latter fact later in the episode, but his reasoning was more fleshed out particularly in this scene. Viewers can digest how deep Futarou cared about his students. To continue ensuring the quint's academic success, he saw fit to step aside and allow a more qualified teacher to continue tutoring them. In the end, the sisters largely failed with their tests, just as it did in the start of Chapter 49, evidently proving Futarou's notion right. From Page 3 of Chapter 49 Eбата, the quint's chauffeur, entered the apartment to inform them of Futarou's resignation, but before doing so, he light-heartedly equates them still as young children. From Page 9 of Chapter 49 Eбата is a fat head. The quint's didn't open their cheat sheets in order in the manga. It was Itsuki who opened her sheet first before Ichika did the same. In the anime, the quint's opened their sheets in order without fail. From Page 12 of Chapter 49 Can a prayer be made for Futarou's classmate whose appearance outside his bakery job was deleted? From Page 20 of Chapter 49 Itsuki ordering a cake for delivery to her family's home occurred inside of the bakery Futarou worked for (in Chapter 50), not outside while he was advertising to spectators. Additionally, Futarou kindly asking his former students to leave the bakery shop was trimmed, leaving his manager's confirming the delivery as the only scene unscathed by the show. From Page 1 of Chapter 50From Page 2 of Chapter 50 Still, unlike when the manager handed Futarou the cake in the entrance of the shop in the show, the manga saw him do the same while standing behind the main counter. How in the hell is Yotsuba supposed to know it's dangerous to walk in the snow with her quick steps and hands wildly swaying back-and-forth if nobody tells her? From Page 3 of Chapter 50 Futarou's imaginary visual of the new teacher working with the quint's didn't see the light of day. From Page 4 of Chapter 50 In the manga, Ichika said she and her siblings told their father about the purchase of their new home after revealing the place to Futarou. That part wasn't relayed in the show. From Page 8 of Chapter 50 The same type of exclusion happened when Futarou thought of the quint's fierce resilience for keeping him as their tutor, something that he couldn't muster when he's encountered with a similar problem. From Page 10 of Chapter 50 As the quint's laughed in glee despite carrying traces of hypothermia, the episode marked its close, putting an end to the Seven Goodbyes arc—save for one thing. From Page 18 of Chapter 50From Page 19 of Chapter 50 The face reveal of the quint's father wasn't done in the anime. It's clear now that the show is opting to hold off on treading that subject for later in the season. They wouldn't do this now, right? The arc is finally over. Nino has finally accepted Futarou as a dependable person in the place of a deplorable fellow, the quint's are living in a new home, anime-onlys still don't know what the Nakano's father looks like, the context for for "Good Work Today," and I'm getting tired of writing. My eyes are killing me with fatigue after drinking many cans of soda to keep me juiced. The post is done so I'm done also. Dr. Pepper is the best drink ever. Go-touban is great. Miku is a delectable goddess. I'm a ruffian.
